Hi TripleTen Hiring Team,

My name is Evgenii. I'm based in Serbia (CET) and I'm applying for the CRM Content Manager role.

In 2.5+ years in a high-throughput content environment, I haven't missed a single deadline — even when requirements changed late or content arrived “not production-ready”. I'm at my best when the work is both creative and operational: writing and assembling content, shipping on a cadence, and building a process that prevents last-minute surprises.

In my current role, I own an end-to-end content production workflow inside a CMS and design-system setup: preparing materials, maintaining reusable templates/modules, doing careful QA, and collaborating closely with stakeholders. The most impactful part of my work has been turning a messy handoff into a repeatable system — structured formats, reusable patterns, and a lightweight pre-release checklist — so the team can ship consistently with less rework and fewer avoidable mistakes.

This is why lifecycle/CRM feels like a natural next step for me. I haven't run a CRM program end-to-end yet, but the core problems are familiar: keeping messaging consistent across channels, validating details before a send, and making sure automation is reliable under time pressure. I'm comfortable with HTML/CSS for templating and QA, and I'm ready to ramp up quickly on Customer.io (or your current tooling) and learn your segmentation logic and routing rules.

If we work together, my first goal would be to learn your existing flows and templates, then quickly improve the “boring but important” parts: QA checklist, template consistency, edge cases, and documentation — while helping the team ship campaigns on time.

Thanks for considering my application. I'm happy to do a small practical task (e.g., review and QA a template, rewrite a short message sequence, or outline an automation with edge cases).

Best regards,
Evgenii Rubin
